Part 2

Your refusal email will show why you were refused endorsement with the reason(s) given. If you think that your application was incorrectly processed or that the Designated Competent Body did not apply its criteria correctly, you should enter the reason in the first box and say what you think the error was. Where you think more than one mistake was made, enter this in the next box with the reason. Repeat the process if you think further mistakes were made, selecting a new box each time.

2.1 Enter the reason(s) for refusal as shown in your refusal email, and say why you think a mistake was made:

People who enter through Tier 1 are expected to have an outstanding track record / career history. The reviewers felt that the applicant's track record was not sufficiently strong to be endorsed under Tier 1 (Exceptional Talent)

Graduating from a world top-15 Computer Science University with distinction, followed by over 4 years of intensive technical experience in some of the most cutting edge AI technologies, I believe my profile is sufficiently strong to be considered for the Tier 1 visa as a promising AI tech talent, based on the guidelines under the Tier 1 (Exceptional Talent) policy guidance document.

2.2 Enter the reason(s) for refusal as shown in your refusal email, and say why you think a mistake was made:

Whilst the candidate may be great at what he does there is not sufficient evidence here to endorse an exceptional talent. He has not outlined in his evidence how he has a track record of innovation or where he has made significant technical, commercial or entrepreneurial contributions in the digital technology sector. Without more concrete examples, we are unable to endorse for exceptional talent or promise.

From the policy guidance document for Tier 1 visa application, I understood that each evidence document should be limited to 2 A4 size pages. This restricted me in elaborating or outlining in details my contributions or accomplishments in my career history. If allowed, I can substantiate the same in more details, that qualifies me as a promising tech talent eligible for Tier 1 visa.
